

Research and Knowledge Transfer Annual Monitoring Report 2007/8

- General overview

The SSES staff have been active in research and knowledge transfer activities. Most contributions to research have come in the form of disseminating information at conferences. There have been two books completed and several refereed research articles. Staff need to continue to strive to complete further research outputs. In the now Institute of Sport and Exercise Science, there will continue to be a focus on supporting staff in completing their research.

For the 2007/8 year, the School went through a validation process. The extensive process may have contributed to the reduction some individual activity.

The Staff developed several action plans to meet the strategic direction of SSES research. The agreed actions are recorded in the Research Advisory Group's minutes. Many of the actions have or are in the process of being implemented.

A process of revisiting the Ethics procedures for the School has developed a rigorous procedure in obtaining ethical approval for all research and will extend to knowledge transfer activities from next year.

Some initiatives resurrected included a UW/University of Birmingham Research Day, PhD student get together and PhD supervisors get together to discuss student and supervisor processes.

- Record of staff doing active research and knowledge transfer

Most staff are actively involved in Research and/or Knowledge Transfer activities. For a complete list, please see Appendix 1.

31 staff are actively involved in research, 19 staff are activity involved in Knowledge Transfer Outputs.

- Record of publications

The complete list of publications can be seen in appendix 2.

32 publications consisting of 2 books, 7 book chapters, 10 refereed articles, 4 journal articles in press, and one peer refereed conference proceedings article, were produced within the School.

Our visiting professor had the most research outputs. One of the issues I believe that are fewer publications is that there continues to be a diverse range of roles and responsibilities that staff are required to undertake in relation to the work of the SSES and the University. These can make it challenging for staff to secure clear periods for research and scholarly activity. I believe we should look at this issue in an attempt to free staff to have more time for research like activities. In the new vision for the Institute, the issue will be addressed.

- Details of knowledge transfer output and dissemination

For a detailed list of Knowledge Transfer Activities, see appendix 3.

Staff are active in consultancy activities. A large number of staff contribute to both the Brazil Football School and the SSES Summer School. The Learning through Sport initiative has several staff members involved, while the Sport Performance and Coaching Centre is quite active in its involvement with various consultations with athletes, referees and coaches. Quite a number of staff are involved with school consultancy and a couple are involved with physical activity initiatives. The Worcester Wolves Basketball club also draws on a number of staff.

There has been quite a few staff working with consultancy in relation to the MARRC centre.

• Discussion of how research and scholarly activity and knowledge transfer feeds into teaching.

All research undertaken in the School is applied in nature and feeds directly into teaching, whether the teaching is research-led, research-oriented, research-based or research-informed (Jenkins, 2005). Many undergraduate modules involve teaching that is research-led through the use of curriculum content drawn from research undertaken by module staff. Teaching is strongly research-oriented (promoting the understanding of the research process) and research-based (using inquiry-based activities, supported by staff experiences) in all of the research methods modules taught across all courses in the School and to an increasing degree in many other UMS modules especially at levels 5, 6 and 7. Teaching is also directly research-informed, with a number of staff engaged in externally and internally funded projects that investigate teaching and learning processes themselves within the discipline.

• Collaborative research and related activities, including international links, including knowledge transfer

A strong external collaborative research ethos is evident in the emerging collaboration with other HEI in supervision of postgraduate research students, particularly the University of Birmingham and in the growing number of students supervised at other HEI by School staff. There is also a strong theme of cross-departmental collaboration within the University itself with evidence presented via publication authorship and both successful and un-successful research grant applications.

SSES has Research Interest Groups (RIG) who meet regularly to discuss possible research ideas and collaboration. Several major initiatives have been drawn from that, e.g. Mountain Biking research, Biomechanics and MARRC research and Obesity and Physical Activity research. RIGs are used for mutual research interests including further development of staff PhDs.

The School's engagement with international research collaborations continues to develop.
