We publish in English, Hindi as well as in all other national and regional languages. When you consider the wide agreement among biblical scholars about who wrote every other book of the New Testament, itâ€™s a little mysterious that we donâ€™t know who wrote Hebrews. There are a handful of contenders. Letâ€™s take a look at the reasons each of them might be the author.Â However, scholarly examination shows that the Greek text of Hebrews could not be a translation of a Semitic text â€” at least as we understand â€œtranslationâ€ today â€” because its rhetorical features would be possible only when composed in Greek.Â In spite of the weight of scholarly inference, the book of Hebrews does not in fact name its author. And so if you were ever asked about the authorship of Hebrews, the correct answer is well expressed by the church father Origen (AD 185?
